Q. Isn't a job just a means to make money?

While a job is indeed a means to earn money, that's not its sole purpose. Choosing a career solely based on financial gain, without finding joy in the work or feeling a sense of achievement in developing your abilities, can lead to stress from feelings of 'boredom', 'not being true to oneself', or 'listlessness'.

Q. What should parents do first to foster a healthy work ethic in their children?

Understand what values your child prioritizes when choosing a career. Simple questions can help reveal their inclinations.

Expand the Meaning of Occupations to Foster a Healthy Work Ethic!

Before asking your children what they want to do, first ask them what kind of person they want to become. Whether it's someone who helps others, heals, or entertains, discuss with them what occupations are necessary to live out the life they envision.

Expanding to a Healthy Work Ethic!

I'm going to be a developer who makes a lot of money.

I'm going to be a developer who makes people's lives more convenient and fulfilling.

I'll become a teacher because my parents want me to.

I'll become a teacher who fosters individuals that brighten society.

I want to be a lawyer who is recognized everywhere.

I want to be a lawyer who understands and stands up for those who are wronged.

Having a healthy work ethic

→ increases satisfaction in work and life,

→ drives efforts for growth,

→ enhances abilities and creates more opportunities!

When the meaning of a profession is expanded upon a foundation of a healthy work ethic, it allows individuals to find meaning in their work and embrace greater opportunities with a heightened sense of life satisfaction.

“Help your children develop a healthy work ethic by adding a positive influence to their career exploration journey!”
