Do you want to raise a child who loves books?

Many of you have pondered how to develop your child's reading habits. It's not always easy to purchase enough books that your child would enjoy at home, and forcing them to read can create an aversion to books. Why not visit a nearby library to naturally encourage a closer relationship with books? Go with a light heart, as if on an outing, freeing yourself from the pressure that reading is a must. Multicultural libraries, created for multicultural families, have books in languages familiar to parents and offer programs that can spark children's interest. If the library becomes a place of enjoyment for visits, gradually, children will grow fonder of books.

Visit a Multicultural Library with Your Child!

Why not visit a multicultural library with your child, where both Korean books and books from various countries are available? With a wide range of books, you can find ones that are beneficial for your child and even ones that may interest you as parents.
